American Institute of Architects Recommendations

Your Downtown does not belong solely to the individual property owners along Washington Street. And neither do your historic buildings. Your Downtown and its historic buildings might be individually owned, but they belong to and impact your entire community. The reason your historic district is a National Historic District is because its impact reaches far beyond the Cannelton community and represents a noteworthy example of a Downtown that is important nationally

Your physical resources are of tremendous value. But when you find that you need to consider decisions regarding the stewardship or repair of specific properties, making responsible decisions, as individuals, local governments, or the community, will require understanding its value on several levels.
