AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF ARCHITECTS
Many rural areas in the United States are shrinking, some far faster than Cannelton. Those that create identity, connections, and a sense of place, however, are thriving. Those that cannot are fading away. Cannelton needs to decide which side of this story they want to be on. With the growth of footloose businesses (businesses that can locate anywhere are not tied to specific local resource such as access to raw materials, easy shipping, and major markets), the value of placemaking, connections, and high quality of life continues to grow in importance. Various case specific economic studies have identified the economic value of connections to water, roads, recreation, and within a community.

Congratulations to Changing Things Up on their grand re-opening and their new remodeled rooms. Stop in and see all the new merchandise and changes at 121 Taylor Street in Cannelton.
